

Ah, for journalist-recall elections

It would be wonderful if Americans could vote out of office those people whom they see as having lost their professionalism, by up to 35 percent since the presidential election. It would also be wonderful if Americans could vote out of office those whom they see as 20 percent less able to get their facts straight now than in the past.

And what if Americans could vote out of office those whom they see as covering up their mistakes 54 percent more now than they did some years back?

Americans will never be able to vote the above out of office, because those who work for America's news organizations can't be voted out of their jobs!
